EMERGENCY MOTION FOR STAY PENDING APPEAL

Pursuant to Fed.R.App.P. 8 and Circuit Rule 8, Congressman William J. Jefferson, the appellant, respectfully moves this Court for a stay pending appeal of the July 10, 2006 Order of the United States District Court, which denied the Congressman's motion for return of property and authorized the Department of Justice to resume its review of material seized pursuant to a search warrant from the Congressman's office on May 20, 2006. A copy of the July 10, 2006 Order and Memorandum Opinion ("Mem.Op.") are attached as Exhibit A.

A notice of appeal was filed on July 11, and in accordance with Rule 8, the request for a stay was addressed to the district court in the first instance. The district court denied the motion for stay pending appeal on July 19. A copy of the court's Order and Memorandum Opinion denying the stay are attached as Exhibit B.

On July 19, 2006, undersigned counsel spoke by phone with Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Lytle, who is counsel of record in this case, and advised him of Congressman Jefferson's intention to file this emergency motion for a stay. Mr. Lytle advised that the Attorney General had instructed that review of the documents not begin until July 26, 2006, unless this Court earlier denies the requested stay. Because this review by the Department of Justice constitutes a separate invasion by the executive in violation of Congressman Jefferson's privilege under the Speech or Debate Clause of the U.S. Constitution, court action is necessary by July 26. This emergency motion, which is being filed promptly on the day after the district court's order denying the stay, as a practical matter could not have been filed within 7 calendar days before July 26, 2006.

If a stay is granted, Congressman Jefferson anticipates that the Department of Justice would seek to have the appeal expedited, and Congressman Jefferson would not oppose an expedited appeal.

BACKGROUND

On Saturday night, May 20, 2006, the Department of Justice executed a search warrant on the Capitol Hill offices of a sitting Congressman for the first time in the history of the United States. More than a dozen agents spent over 18 hours reviewing every file and every piece of paper in the Congressman's office, and they copied and carried away the hard drive of each of the computers used by the Congressman and every member of his legislative staff. The Congressman was not provided with any opportunity to identify or remove legislative materials before they were reviewed by members of the executive branch and then seized, and his counsel and the General Counsel for the House of Representative were barred from his office during the execution of the warrant.

Congressman Jefferson promptly moved the court that issued the warrant for return of all of his property, complaining that the execution of the search violated the Speech or Debate Clause of the Constitution, and that the FBI's ongoing review of the documents and computer files seized would further violate his constitutional privilege. The bipartisan leadership group of the House of Representatives also denounced the search, and filed an amicus brief in support of the Congressman's motion, arguing that the warrant and its execution violated the Constitution.

As the district court observed, “[t]he unprecedented search of Congressman Jefferson’s office has raised questions of serious constitutional magnitude that directly implicate the fundamental workings of the federal government.” Mem.Op. at 8. What the Congressman seeks here is an order that would maintain the status quo and prevent any further violations of his privilege while this Court considers the historic and important questions presented by his appeal.

ARGUMENT

When considering a motion for stay pending appeal, the court must balance: 1) the likelihood of success on the merits; 2) whether the appellant will suffer irreparable injury if the stay is denied; 3) whether the issuance of the stay will cause substantial harm to other parties; and 4) the public interest. Hilton v. Braunskill, 481 U.S. 770, 776 (1987); Virginia Petroleum Jobbers Ass’n v. FPC, 259 F.2d 921, 925 (D.C. Cir. 1958); U.S. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 314 F.3d 612, 617 (D.C. Cir.

2003); Circuit Rule 8. The significance of the issue on appeal is also a critical consideration:

An order maintaining the status quo is appropriate when a serious legal question is presented, when little if any harm will befall other interested persons or the public and when denial of the order would inflict irreparable injury on the movant.

Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Commission v. Holiday Tours, Inc., 559 F.2d 841, 844 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Applying these standards, this Court should grant the Congressman's motion.<sup>1</sup>

I. In Light of Supreme Court Precedent and the Law Of This Circuit, There Is A Substantial Likelihood That The Congressman Will Succeed On The Merits.

Supreme Court precedent and the law of this circuit mandate the reversal of the decision of the district court. The district court clearly erred when it held that the Speech or Debate Clause only prevents the use of privileged material, and not its compelled disclosure,

<sup>1</sup> The denial of the Congressman's motion for return of his property is an appealable order, whether analyzed as a final order in an independent proceeding or as an interlocutory order. See Helstoski v. Meanor, 442 U.S. 500, 506 (1979); U.S. v. Rostenkowski, 59 F.3d 1291, 1296 (D.C. Cir. 1995) ("an interlocutory order of the district court may be appealed immediately if it: (1) conclusively determine[s] the disputed question; (2) resolve[s] an important issue completely separate from the merits of the action; and (3) would be effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment.") (quotations omitted).

Mem.Op. at 18, n.7, and when it found that the search was constitutional because it did not compel the Congressman to engage in the testimonial act of producing his records. Mem.Op. at 14.

Article I, §6 of the United States Constitution provides: “for any Speech or Debate in either House, [Senators and Representatives] shall not be questioned in any other Place.” The purpose of the Speech or Debate Clause is to “protect the integrity of the legislative process by insuring the independence of individual legislators.” Eastland v. U.S. Serviceman’s Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 502 (1975). The clause serves “to preserve the Constitutional structure of separate, co-equal, and independent branches of government.” United States v. Helstoski, 442 U.S. 477, 491 (1979). Unlike other privileges commonly analyzed by the courts, the Speech or Debate privilege is absolute when it applies, and there is no balancing test to be employed. Eastland, 421 U.S. at 509-510.

In U.S. v. Johnson, 383 U.S. 169 (1966), the Supreme Court reviewed the historical underpinnings of the clause. It explained that the privilege was designed to protect the independence and the integrity of the legislature and to reinforce the separation of powers established by the Constitution. 383 U.S. at 178. The court quoted at length from Madison’s Federalist No. 48, where he wrote that after distinguishing between the legislative, executive, and judicial powers, “the next and most difficult task is to provide some practical security for each against the invasion of the others.” Id. 178–79. The court concluded, “[t]he legislative privilege, protecting against possible prosecution by an unfriendly executive and conviction by a hostile judiciary, is one manifestation of the ‘practical security’ for ensuring the independence of the legislature.” Id. at 179. The Johnson opinion also made clear that the privilege was crafted “to prevent intimidation by the executive and accountability before a possibly hostile judiciary.” Id. at 181.

The Supreme Court repeated these principles in subsequent cases. In Gravel v. U.S., 408 U.S. 606 (1972), the court confirmed, “[t]he Speech or Debate Clause was designed to assure a co-equal branch of the government wide freedom of speech, debate, and deliberation without intimidation or threats from the Executive Branch.” 408 U.S. at 616.

The Speech or Debate Clause has two components. First, the clause provides immunity from lawsuits for all actions “within the legislative sphere . . . even though the conduct, if performed in another context, would in itself be unconstitutional or otherwise contrary to criminal or civil statutes.” Doe v. McMillan, 412 U.S. 306, 312-13 (1973)(quotations omitted). This Constitutional immunity extends both to civil suits and criminal prosecutions. Second, and more importantly here, the clause provides a non-disclosure privilege. Gravel v. U.S., 408 U.S. 606, 615-16 (1972). This aspect of the privilege operates not only to protect those to whom it applies from being compelled to give testimony as to privileged matters, but also to protect them from being compelled to produce privileged documents. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Williams, 62 F.3d 408, 420 (D.C. Cir. 1995); MINPECO, S.A. v. Conticommodity Services, Inc., 844 F.2d 856, 859-61 (D.C. Cir. 1988).

The warrant and its execution violated the second component of the clause because the executive has already spent 18 hours rummaging through a Congressman’s office, reviewing every piece of paper to be found there, including his legislative records. The executive has already imaged and seized multiple computers, containing legislative records, used by the Congressman and his staff -- all of whom are protected by the privilege, see Gravel, 408 U.S at 616-17.

The Congressman is particularly likely to succeed on appeal since this circuit has already rejected the rationale relied on by the district court. In Brown & Williamson, this court held that the non-disclosure prong of the Speech or Debate privilege specifically covers legislative documents. 62 F.3d at 420-421. The opinion flatly rejected the theory upon which DOJ and the court relied, i.e., that the Constitution only prohibits making evidentiary use of Speech or Debate material, and not the compelled disclosure of a Congressman's records:

B & W urges us to join the Third Circuit in holding that even though the Speech or Debate Clause bars the use of documents as evidence against Members, it does not privilege them against "discovery" -- and thus does not justify congressional refusals to disclose.

We do not accept the proposition that the testimonial immunity of the Speech or Debate Clause only applies when Members or their aides are personally questioned. Documentary evidence can certainly be as revealing as oral communications . . . . [I]ndications as to what Congress is looking at provide clues as to what Congress is doing or might be about to do -- and this is true whether or not the documents are sought for the purpose of inquiring into (or frustrating) legislative conduct or to advance some other goals . . . .

62 F.3d at 420.

The Brown & Williamson court further stated that there was no basis for making a distinction between the use of legislative materials and their compelled disclosure:

None of the Supreme Court's opinions acknowledges such a distinction . . . .[O]ur own circuit precedent precludes our making this distinction . . . . A party is no more entitled to compel congressional testimony – or production of documents – than it is to sue Congressmen.

62 F.3d at 420-21 (emphasis added).

The Brown & Williamson court upheld an order quashing a subpoena directed to two Members of Congress for documents that had allegedly been stolen from the tobacco company's lawyers. The court concluded:

B & W's claim at bottom, is to a right to engage in a broad scale discovery of documents in a congressional file . . . . The Speech or Debate Clause bars that claim.

Id. at 423. In this case, the district court erred when it failed to apply the reasoning of Brown & Williamson and hold that the Speech or Debate Clause barred the "broad scale discovery of documents" at issue here.<sup>2</sup>

The district court determined that the nondisclosure prong of the Congressman's Speech or Debate privilege was not implicated because the search warrant called for the discovery of documents and it did not - like a subpoena - call upon the Congressman to provide the testimony that would be inherent in the act of producing one's records. Mem.Op. at 14. But the district court erred as a matter of law when it imported concepts of Fifth Amendment jurisprudence<sup>3</sup> into its discussion of the Speech or Debate Clause. As noted above, in Brown & Williamson this court clearly rejected the notion that the second prong of the Speech or Debate Clause "only applies when Members or their aides are personally questioned." 62 F.3d at 420.

DOJ argued below, and the trial court appeared to agree, that any review of privileged material would be "incidental" because DOJ planned to use a "filter team" to segregate potentially privileged documents from the actual prosecutors. Mem.Op. at 18. But the employment of a filter team cannot cure the constitutional harm here. The Speech or Debate Clause was designed to protect the legislative sphere from any invasion by the executive, not simply the particular prosecutors who will eventually present the case in court. Furthermore, the Supreme Court has repeatedly made clear that the Speech or Debate privilege, where it applies, is absolute. See, e.g., Eastland, 421 U.S. at 509-510.<sup>4</sup>

For all of these reasons, there is a substantial likelihood that Congressman Jefferson will prevail on the merits. Even if this Court is unprepared to make such a determination at this preliminary stage, courts have recognized that where the denial of a stay “will utterly destroy the status quo, irreparably harming appellants, but the granting of a stay will cause relatively slight harm to appellee,

<sup>4</sup> The district court also raised the concern that “carried to its logical conclusion, [the Congressman’s] argument would require a Member of Congress to be given advance notice of any search of his property . . .,” Mem.Op. at 12, and it then ruled that it found no support for that proposition. Mem.Op. at 17. The district court erred in premising its ruling on this consideration since it was not the Congressman’s position that prior notice would be necessary. In fact, the court was advised during oral argument that prior notice would not be required to preserve the Speech or Debate privilege. Rather, the Congressman and the amicus explained that law enforcement agents could execute a warrant on a Congressman’s office with no advance notice, but once the premises were secured, the Congressman must be provided with an opportunity to identify and segregate legislative materials before his files can be reviewed by the executive.

appellants need not show an absolute probability of success in order to be entitled to a stay." Providence Journal Co. v. FBI, 595 F.2d 889, 890 (1st Cir. 1979)(citing WMATA v. Holiday Tours).

II. The Congressman Will Suffer Irreparable Injury If The Stay Is Denied.

The second factor unquestionably supports the issuance of a stay. If, in the absence of a stay, the executive branch proceeds to review the seized materials -- including legislative materials -- the Congressman will be further irreparably harmed because his absolute Constitutional privilege will be invaded in a manner that the ultimate return of the documents cannot fully vindicate. As noted above, the fact that DOJ will assign the review to filter teams does not undo the constitutional injury here. The Speech or Debate Clause was designed to protect the legislative sphere from any invasion by the executive, not simply the particular prosecutors who will eventually present the case in court.

III. The Issuance Of The Stay Will Not Harm Other Parties.

DOJ will not be harmed by the stay sought in this case. The investigation into the allegations against the Congressman is underway in the Eastern District of Virginia, and it can continue unimpeded during the time it takes to resolve the constitutional controversy prompted by DOJ's decision to employ this unprecedented tactic.

Indeed, DOJ has recently initiated other time consuming evidence gathering efforts that will prolong the investigation notwithstanding the outcome of this motion.<sup>5</sup> On June 28, 2006, a subpoena was served upon the Office of the Chief Administrative Officer of the United States House of Representatives, [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]
[REDACTED] Therefore, the stay pending appeal sought here is unlikely to delay the completion of DOJ's investigation at all.

Finally, the seized documents remain in the custody of the executive, they have been secured, and there is no danger that they will be lost or destroyed, so while a stay preserves the status quo, it will not prejudice DOJ. If DOJ prevails on appeal, it can proceed to review the documents. As the Helstoski v. Meanor and Rostenkowski cases establish, the courts have been willing to tolerate some delay -- even in the prosecution of Congressmen -- when Speech or Debate issues are at stake. Accordingly, the third factor favors the issuance of a stay.

IV. Issuance Of The Stay Is In The Public Interest.

The public would suffer no harm if the court grants the motion for stay pending appeal. The case does not involve any threat to public health or safety. On the other hand, there is a very strong public interest in ensuring that fundamental constitutional issues are fully aired and carefully considered by the courts. The fact that the leaders of both political parties in the House of Representatives saw fit to come together in a bipartisan manner to argue that the warrant and its execution violated the Speech or Debate Clause reinforces the public interest in the proper legal resolution of the significant question at stake here.

The Speech or Debate Clause was not adopted as a private benefit to congressmen but to protect legislative independence for the benefit of the public. Indeed, the Speech or Debate Clause is one of the cornerstones of the separation of powers, a fundamental principle that undergirds our democracy and ultimately assures the freedom of the American people. The public plainly has an interest in assuring that questions about the scope of the clause are carefully weighed.

CONCLUSION

WHEREFORE, Appellant Congressman William J. Jefferson respectfully submits that his emergency motion for stay pending appeal should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM J. JEFFERSON

Case No. 06-0231 M-01

MEMORANDUM OPINION

“All laws should be made to operate as much on the law makers as upon the people; . . . Whenever it is necessary to exempt any part of the government from sharing in these common burthens, that necessity ought not only to be palpable, but should on no account be exceeded.” 2 Founders’ Constitution 331 (Philip B. Kurland & Ralph Lerner eds., 1987) (James Madison, The Militia Bill, House of Representatives (Dec. 16, 1790)). Pending before the Court is Congressman William J. Jefferson’s Motion for Return of Property and Emergency Motion for Interim Relief, in which he contends that the execution of a search warrant on his congressional office was unlawful in violation of the Constitution’s Speech or Debate Clause, separation of powers principle, and Fourth Amendment.<sup>1</sup> Having carefully considered the submissions of Congressman Jefferson, the Bipartisan Legal Advisory Group of the Unites States House of Representatives as amicus curiae, and the Government, the Court will deny the motion.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Congressman Jefferson’s Motion for Emergency Interim Relief sought an Order enjoining FBI agents and the Department of Justice from reviewing or inspecting the seized items and sequestering those items in a secure place. On May 25, 2006, the President issued a Memorandum directing the Solicitor General to take sole custody of the materials seized from Congressman Jefferson’s office, and to seal and sequester those materials from anyone outside of the Solicitor General’s office for forty-five days. Accordingly, the Motion for Emergency Interim Relief is now moot.

I. BACKGROUND<sup>3</sup>

Over the past year, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (“FBI”) has been conducting an investigation into whether Congressman William J. Jefferson and other individuals bribed or conspired to bribe a public official, committed or conspired to commit wire fraud, or bribed or conspired to bribe a foreign official, in violation of federal criminal statutes. The investigation centers around allegations that Congressman Jefferson used his position in Congress to promote the sale of telecommunications equipment and services offered by iGate – a Louisiana-based communications firm – to Nigeria, Ghana, and possibly other African nations, in return for payments of stock and cash. As a result of the Government’s investigation into the scheme, one of Congressman Jefferson’s former staffers pleaded guilty to bribing and conspiring to bribe Congressman Jefferson, and was sentenced to eight years of imprisonment. The President and CEO of iGate also pleaded guilty to bribing and conspiring to bribe Congressman Jefferson.

On Thursday, May 18, 2006, the Government filed with this Court an application and affidavit for a warrant to search Congressman Jefferson’s congressional office for paper documents and computer files related to the alleged bribery scheme and other

Honorable J. Dennis Hastert, Speaker of the House; the Honorable John A. Boehner, Majority Leader; the Honorable Roy Blunt, Majority Whip; the Honorable Nancy Pelosi, Democratic Leader; and the Honorable Steny H. Hoyer, Democratic Whip. The Court granted the Group’s motion for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae in support of Congressman Jefferson’s motion in recognition of the importance of the House’s interest in and position on the questions of serious constitutional magnitude that are raised in this matter.

<sup>3</sup> Certain portions of this litigation remain under seal. Because this Memorandum Opinion and accompanying Order shall be made available to the public, the Opinion refers only to the redacted search warrant affidavit and to other information that is already part of the public record.

fraudulent transactions. According to Congressman Jefferson and The Bipartisan Legal Advisory Group, the execution of a search warrant upon the office of a sitting Congressman is apparently without historical precedent since the adoption of the Constitution more than 200 years ago. The eighty-three-page affidavit laid out the evidence the Government had obtained over the course of the investigation. The application described in detail the paper documents to be seized and the precise search terms to be used in examining the computer files. The search warrant sought no legitimate legislative material that would be considered privileged under the Speech or Debate Clause.

The application also set forth a set of “special search procedures” to be used in an effort to “minimize the likelihood that any potentially politically sensitive, non-responsive items” would be disclosed, and also to prevent investigators and members of the Prosecution Team from obtaining documents or files “that may fall within the purview of the Speech or Debate Clause . . . or any other pertinent privilege.” Aff. ¶ 136. These procedures involved the designation of a Filter Team, which was composed of two Department of Justice attorneys who were not on the Prosecution Team and an FBI agent who had no role in the investigation or prosecution of the case.

For paper documents, the Filter Team would review the documents seized to determine first whether each document was responsive, and second whether it fell within the purview of the Speech or Debate Clause or any other privilege. Any documents found to be non-responsive would be returned to counsel for Congressman Jefferson. As to the potentially privileged documents, a log and copies thereof would be provided to Congressman Jefferson’s counsel within twenty days of the search. The Filter Team would then submit the documents to the Court for a final determination of privilege. Copies of documents that were found to be responsive and unprivileged would be provided to the Prosecution Team and to Congressman Jefferson's counsel within ten days of the search.

As to computer files, another designated Filter Team (made up of certified FBI computer examiners who had no role in the investigation or prosecution of the case) would perform the search of the computers, subject to the terms laid out in the warrant application. Again, the Filter Team would screen out non-responsive and potentially privileged files in the same manner as was to be done with the paper documents.

Having found that the application and affidavit established probable cause to believe that evidence of a crime would be found in Congressman Jefferson's congressional office, the Court granted the Government's application, issued the warrant, and ordered that the search be conducted on or before Sunday, May 21, 2006. On Saturday, May 20, 2006, federal agents executed the warrant. During the search, the agents excluded both Congressman Jefferson's counsel and counsel for the U.S. House of Representatives. The agents ultimately seized copies of the hard drives of each of the office's computers and two boxes of paper records.

On Wednesday, May 24, 2006, Congressman Jefferson filed the instant motion for return of the seized material under Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. On June 7, 2006, the Bipartisan Legal Advisory Group ("amicus"), as amicus curiae, filed a brief in support of the Congressman's motion. The Government opposed the motion. On June 16, 2006, a hearing was held at which the Court heard oral argument on the motion.

II. ANALYSIS

Congressman Jefferson moves for return of the property seized during the execution of the search warrant on his congressional office under Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, arguing that the search was unconstitutional as it violated the Speech or Debate Clause, the separation of powers principle, and the Fourth Amendment.

A. Rule 41

The Fourth Amendment shields citizens from unreasonable searches and seizures. Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure “implements the Fourth Amendment by requiring that an impartial magistrate determine from an affidavit showing probable cause whether information possessed by law-enforcement officers justifies the issuance of a search warrant.” Jones v. United States, 357 U.S. 493, 498 (1958). To be valid, a search requires “a prior showing of probable cause, the warrant authorizing [the search] must particularly describe the place to be searched, and the person or things to be seized, and . . . it may not have the breadth, generality, and long life of the general warrant against which the Fourth Amendment was aimed.” United States v. White, 401 U.S. 745, 758 (1971) (internal quotation marks omitted). Here, neither Congressman Jefferson nor amicus contend that the search warrant issued here failed to meet any of those requirements.

Congressman Jefferson and amicus argue that the search was nonetheless unlawful because the manner in which it was executed violated the Constitution. The Supreme Court has made clear that reasonableness is the “overriding test of compliance with the Fourth Amendment.” Zurcher v. Stanford Daily, 436 U.S. 547, 559 (1978). For it is not the case that “searches, however or whenever executed, may never be unreasonable if supported by a warrant issued on probable cause and properly identifying the place to be searched and the property to be seized.” Id. at 559-60; accord United States v. Koyomejian, 970 F.2d 536, 550 (9th Cir. 1992) (Kozinski, J., concurring) (“Reasonableness is an independent requirement of the Fourth Amendment, over and above the Warrant Clause requirements of probable cause and particularity.”); United States v. Torres, 751 F.2d 875, 883 (7th Cir. 1984) (“[A] search could be unreasonable, though conducted pursuant to an otherwise valid warrant, by intruding on personal privacy to an extent disproportionate to the likely benefits from obtaining fuller compliance with the law.”). “[T]here can be no ready test for determining reasonableness other than by balancing the need to search against the invasion which the search entails.” Camara v. Municipal Court of City and County of San Francisco, 387 U.S. 523, 536-37 (1967). Therefore, while the issuance of the search warrant was valid, the search of Congressman Jefferson’s office may still have been unlawful if it was an otherwise unreasonable invasion.

Rule 41(g) allows an owner to seek return of his property that has been unlawfully seized by the government. The rule provides in relevant part:

A person aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure of property . . . may move for the property’s return. . . . The court must receive evidence on any factual issue necessary to decide the motion. If it grants the motion, the court must return the property to the movant, but may impose reasonable conditions to protect access to the property and its use in later proceedings.

Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(g).

Actions seeking the return of property are governed by equitable principles.

Industrias Cardoen, LTDA. v. United States, 983 F.2d 49, 51 (5th Cir. 1993). Whether to exercise its jurisdiction to order the government to return the property is soundly within the discretion of the trial court. Id. Here, the Government urges the Court not to exercise its equitable jurisdiction to decide the Motion for Return of Property at this time.

Generally, where a grand jury investigation has commenced, a decision on a Rule 41(g) motion should be deferred until after an indictment has been issued, in the absence of irreparable harm. See, e.g., United States v. Douleh, 220 F.R.D. 391, 397 (W.D.N.Y. 2003).<sup>4</sup> Here, Congressman Jefferson submits that he has suffered irreparable harm, with no adequate remedy at law, because the violation of his constitutional rights cannot be vindicated by an action for damages or any other traditional legal relief. Reply Mem. Of Congressman Jefferson in Supp. of Mot. For Return of Property (“Reply”) 21. While <sup>4</sup> Courts’ reluctance to address Rule 41 motions for return of property during criminal investigations stems from the principle that the exclusionary rule does not apply to proceedings before a grand jury. See, e.g., In re Two Search Warrants Issued March 14, 1986, 110 F.R.D. 354, 355 (E.D.N.Y. 1986) (citing United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338 (1974)).

“Because the grand jury does not finally adjudicate guilt or innocence, it has traditionally been allowed to pursue its investigative and accusatorial functions unimpeded by the evidentiary and procedural restrictions applicable to a criminal trial. Permitting witnesses to invoke the exclusionary rule before a grand jury would . . . delay and disrupt grand jury proceedings.”

Calandra, 414 U.S. at 349. Motions for return of property were formerly made pursuant to Rule 41(e), under which an unlawful seizure claim was considered to be equivalent to a motion to suppress. See Douleh, 220 F.R.D. at 397 n.5. Effective December 1, 2002, however, Rule 41 was amended and reorganized. What was formerly found at Rule 41(e) is now found at Rule 41(g). Pursuant to the amendments, under Rule 41(g) a court may return seized property to a claimant and “impose reasonable conditions to protect access to the property and its use in later proceedings.” Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(g). Accordingly, it is no longer the case that property returned subject to a Rule 41(g) motion is necessarily excluded from use in front of the grand jury.

Congressman Jefferson overlooks the sure availability of a motion to suppress the evidence seized during the search should the Government's investigation result in his indictment, the Court recognizes that "[t]he unprecedented search of Congressman Jefferson's office has raised questions of serious constitutional magnitude that directly implicate the fundamental workings of the federal government." Reply 19. The Court agrees that the interests of justice demand that these issues be addressed now. Cf. Helstoski v. Meanor, 442 U.S. 500, 506-08 (1979) (denial of motion to dismiss indictment may be immediately appealed when based on the Speech or Debate Clause because there is no other way to provide the full protections of the privilege).

B. Constitutionality of the Search

Congressman Jefferson contends that the execution of the search warrant on his congressional office violated the absolute privilege and immunity that Members of Congress enjoy under the Speech or Debate Clause of the Constitution and the separation of powers principle. Further, according to Congressman Jefferson, the search was unreasonable in violation of the Fourth Amendment because his counsel was excluded from the search, and because the search warrant affidavit contained the flawed premise that the Government had exhausted all other reasonable methods of obtaining the evidence sought.

1. Speech or Debate Clause

Congressman Jefferson first argues that the search of his congressional office was an unconstitutional violation of his legislative privilege under the Speech or Debate Clause. Article I, Section 6, Clause 1 of the Constitution provides in relevant part:

The Senators and Representatives . . . shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony, and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

This language, known as the Speech or Debate Clause, was approved at the Constitutional Convention without discussion and without opposition. See United States v. Johnson, 383 U.S. 169, 177 (1966) (citing V Elliot’s Debates 406 (1836 ed.); II Records of the Federal Convention 246 (Farrand ed. 1911)). The language was derived from Article V of the Articles of Confederation: “Freedom of speech and debate in Congress shall not be impeached or questioned in any court, or place out of Congress,” which in turn was taken from the English Bill of Rights of 1689: “That the Freedom of Speech, and Debates or Proceedings in Parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any Court or Place out of Parliament.” Id. at 177-78 (citing 1 W. & M., Sess. 2, c. 2).

The language in the English Bill of Rights reflected the culmination of a history of conflict between the Commons and the Tudor and Stuart monarchs during which successive monarchs utilized the criminal and civil law to suppress and intimidate critical legislators. Id. at 178. The privilege was designed as an important protection of the independence and integrity of the legislature. Id. “The legislative privilege, protecting against possible prosecution by an unfriendly executive and conviction by a hostile judiciary, is one manifestation of the ‘practical security’ for ensuring the independence of the legislature.” Id. at 179 (quoting The Federalist No. 48 (James Madison) (J. Cooke ed., 1961)).

While the Speech or Debate Clause has English roots, it must be interpreted in light of the American constitutional scheme of government. Brewster, 408 U.S. at 508. In the American governmental structure, the clause serves the additional purpose of reinforcing the separation of powers designed by the Founders. Johnson, 383 U.S. at 178. Importantly, as Chief Justice Burger observed, it must be remembered that our system of government differs from the English system in that unlike their Parliament, our Congress is not the supreme authority but a coordinate branch. See United States v. Brewster, 408 U.S. 501, 508 (1972). “Our task, therefore, is to apply the Clause in such a way as to insure the independence of the legislature without altering the historic balance of the three co-equal branches of Government.” Id.

The first Supreme Court decision that addressed the Speech or Debate Clause held that the privilege should be read broadly, to include not only “words spoken in debate,” but anything “generally done in a session of the House by one of its members in relation to the business before it.” Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168, 204 (1880). When the Clause applies, it is an absolute privilege. See Eastland v. United States Serviceman’s Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 501 (1975) (“The question to be resolved is whether the actions of the petitioners fall within the sphere of legitimate legislative activity. If they do, the petitioners shall not be questioned in any other Place about those activities since the prohibitions of the Speech or Debate Clause are absolute.”) (internal quotation marks omitted) (footnote omitted).

It is well established that the Clause provides Members of Congress with two distinct privileges. See Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606, 614 (1972). The first is that they are free from arrest while attending or traveling to or from a session of their House. Id.<sup>3</sup> It is clear, however, that the “constitutional freedom from arrest does not exempt Members of Congress from the operation of the ordinary criminal laws . . .

Indeed, implicit in the narrow scope of the privilege of freedom from arrest is, as [Thomas] Jefferson noted, the judgment that legislators ought not to stand above the law they create but ought generally to be bound by it as are ordinary persons.” Id. at 615 (citing T. Jefferson, Manual of Parliamentary Practice, S. Doc. No. 92-1, p. 437 (1971)).

The second privilege provided to Members of Congress by the Clause shields them from questioning in any other place for any speech or debate in either House. Gravel, 408 U.S. at 615. Members may not be made to answer, either in terms of questions or in terms of defending themselves from prosecution, for speech or activities done in furtherance of the legislative process. Id. at 616. Accordingly, the Speech or Debate Clause provides both a testimonial privilege and immunity from liability for legitimate legislative acts. See McSurely v. McClellan, 553 F.2d 1277, 1299 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (“[T]he Speech or Debate Clause acts as an exclusionary rule and testimonial privilege, as well as substantive defense . . .”).

The Speech or Debate privilege “is broad enough to insure the historic independence of the Legislative Branch, essential to our separation of powers, but narrow enough to guard against the excesses of those who would corrupt the process by corrupting its Members.” Brewster, 408 U.S. at 525; Doe v. McMillan, 412 U.S. 306, 317 (1973) (“[T]he Speech or Debate Clause has finite limits . . .”). The issue here is <sup>3</sup> “History reveals, and prior cases so hold, that this part of the Clause exempts Members from arrest in civil cases only.” Gravel, 408 U.S. at 614; Williamson v. United States, 28 S. Ct. 163, 170 (1908) (“[T]he term ‘treason, felony, and breach of the peace,’ as used in the [Speech or Debate Clause], excepts from the operation of the privilege all criminal offenses . . .”).

whether the Speech or Debate Clause's privileges and immunities extend so far as to insulate a Member of Congress from the execution of a valid search warrant on his congressional office.

Congressman Jefferson argues that because the Government necessarily reviewed and seized privileged material during the search, without giving Jefferson the opportunity to first segregate such privileged material, the execution of the search violated the Constitution. Congressman Jefferson and amicus are both clear that it is not their position that the office of a Member of Congress may never be searched pursuant to a valid warrant. Rather, they argue that the discovery of privileged material by the Executive Branch during the search rendered it unconstitutional. See Reply 9. According to Congressman Jefferson, a search on a congressional office could be executed only after the Member of Congress is given the initial opportunity to identify and remove what he deems to be privileged material. See Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Return of Property ("Mem.") 13-14. Carried to its logical conclusion, this argument would require a Member of Congress to be given advance notice of any search of his property, including property outside of his congressional office, such as his home or car, and further that he be allowed to remove any material he deemed to be covered by the legislative privilege prior to a search.<sup>5</sup>

Congressman Jefferson argues that this matter is controlled by Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Williams, 62 F.3d 408 (D.C. Cir. 1995), which reinforced the principle that the Speech or Debate Clause's testimonial privilege is absolute. In that case, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit quashed subpoenas issued to two Members of Congress, finding that the Speech or Debate Clause barred enforcement of the subpoenas because the materials sought were privileged as they came into the Members' possession through the legitimate legislative process. See id. at 421. The D.C. Circuit held that "documents or other material that comes into the hands of congressmen may be reached either in a direct suit or a subpoena only if the circumstances by which they come can be thought to fall outside 'legislative acts' or the legitimate legislative sphere." Id.

<sup>5</sup> While Congressman Jefferson does not challenge the Executive's authority to search his home or car, see Reply 2 n.1, if the discovery of privileged legislative material by the Government is a violation of the Constitution, then any location in which legislative material is kept (thus subjecting it to inadvertent seizure) would be insulated from a search, absent prior notice and opportunity to remove the privileged material.

Congressman Jefferson's argument blurs the line between a subpoena and a search warrant – this argument reminds one of the proverb that "the most dangerous thing in the world is to try to leap a chasm in two jumps." David Lloyd George, British Prime Minister (1863-1945). In fact, the difference between a warrant and a subpoena is of critical importance here. A search warrant, in contrast to a subpoena, is subject to the stringent requirements of the Fourth Amendment, may be issued only pursuant to prior judicial approval, and authorizes Government officers to seize evidence without requiring enforcement through the courts. See United States v. Miller, 425 U.S. 435, 446 n.8 (1976). In contrast, "the person served [with a subpoena] determines whether he will surrender the items identified in the subpoena or challenge the validity of the subpoena prior to compliance." In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Dec. 10, 1987, 926 F.2d 847, 854 (9th Cir. 1991). Because the case addressed civil subpoenas, and says nothing about the availability of documents pursuant to a search warrant in a criminal investigation, Brown & Williamson does not control here.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>6</sup> In Brown & Williamson, the D.C. Circuit acknowledged that the outcome in a case involving criminal rather than civil process may be different, when it noted that the

The Court recognizes that the Speech or Debate Clause provides Congressman Jefferson with a testimonial privilege, and further that the testimonial privilege is absolute. Unlike producing evidence in response to a subpoena, however, which is a testimonial act, see United States v. Hubbell, 530 U.S. 27, 36-37 (2000), having one's property subjected to the execution of a valid search warrant does not have a testimonial component. See Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 51-52 (2004) (describing "testimonial" evidence).

Thus, the Speech or Debate Clause's testimonial privilege was not triggered by the execution of the search warrant. Cf. Andresen v. Maryland, 427 U.S. 463 (1976); Johnson v. United States, 228 U.S. 457, 458 (1913) ("A party is privileged from producing the evidence but not from its production."). In Andresen, the Supreme Court held that the execution of a search warrant does not trigger the Fifth Amendment's testimonial privilege because there is no compulsion to speak or act:

". . . petitioner was not asked to say or to do anything. The records seized contained statements that petitioner had voluntarily committed to writing. The search for and seizure of these records were conducted by law enforcement personnel. Finally, when these records were introduced at trial, they were authenticated by a handwriting expert, not by petitioner. Any compulsion of petitioner to speak, other than the inherent psychological pressure to respond at trial to unfavorable evidence, was not present."

427 U.S. at 473. Similarly here, Congressman Jefferson was not made to say or do anything. In fact, as his motion highlights, he was not even present at the search. Like in Andresen, there simply was no compulsory testimony to trigger the privilege. The Supreme Court has "at least suggest[ed] that the testimonial privilege might be less stringently applied when inconsistent with a sovereign interest" such as the sovereign interest in law enforcement. 62 F.3d at 419-20.

Speech or Debate Clause protects Members of Congress from being “questioned.” U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1. Here, Congressman Jefferson has not been “questioned” in any way. Just as a search warrant does not trigger the Fifth Amendment’s testimonial privilege, neither does a search trigger the Speech or Debate Clause’s testimonial privilege.

Amicus argues that Andresen’s principle that a search warrant does not trigger a testimonial privilege is inapplicable here because the Speech or Debate Clause protects against any compelled disclosure of legislative activities and information, not inferences that may be drawn from the act of producing documents as with the Fifth Amendment. See Mem. of P. & A. of the Bipartisan Legal Advisory Group of the U.S. House of Representatives as Amicus Curiae (“Amicus Brief”) 23 n.15. The arguments made by Congressman Jefferson and amicus stand for the proposition that legislative material is absolutely privileged from review by or disclosure to either of the co-equal branches of government. While it is important to recognize that different policies undergird the Speech or Debate privilege and the Fifth Amendment’s privilege against self-incrimination, the argument made by amicus contorts the policies behind the Speech or Debate Clause.

The purpose of the Speech or Debate Clause is not to promote or maintain secrecy in legislative activity. As Justice Douglas once stated, “The generation that made the nation thought secrecy in government one of the instruments of Old World tyranny and committed itself to the principle that a democracy cannot function unless the people are permitted to know what their government is up to.” EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 105

(1973) (Douglas, J., dissenting) (quoting Henry Steele Commager from The New York Review of Books, Oct. 5, 1972, at 7).

The purpose of the Speech or Debate Clause is rather to protect the independence and integrity of the legislature by not questioning Members of Congress for their legitimate legislative acts. See Brown & Williamson, 62 F.3d at 416 (legislative privileges and immunities designed “to prevent intimidation by the executive and accountability before a possibly hostile judiciary”) (quoting United States v. Johnson, 383 U.S. 169, 181(1966)). The Fifth Amendment also protects one from being compelled to answer questions. Just as the Fifth Amendment does not protect a person from disclosure of incriminating evidence, the Speech or Debate Clause does not prohibit disclosure of legislative material. Rather, it prohibits a Member from having to answer questions as to his legislative activity. Here, Congressman Jefferson has not been questioned about actions that fall within the sphere of legitimate legislative activity.

The D.C. Circuit has held that the “touchstone” of the Speech or Debate Clause privilege is “interference with legislative activities.” Brown & Williamson, 62 F.3d at 421. Thus the Court’s decision here depends upon whether the execution of the search warrant impermissibly interfered with Congressman Jefferson’s legislative work. See MINPECO, S.A. v. Conticommodity Services, Inc., 844 F.2d 856, 859 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Unlike in Brown & Williamson, the material sought here was not privileged as it did not fall within the legitimate legislative sphere. Accordingly, the Court finds that the search did not impermissibly interfere with Congressman Jefferson’s legislative activities.

Congress’ capacity to function effectively is not threatened by permitting congressional offices to be searched pursuant to validly issued search warrants, which are only available in relation to criminal investigations, are subject to the rigors of the Fourth Amendment, and require prior approval by the neutral third branch of government. As discussed earlier, search warrants are very different from subpoenas, which may be issued at will, are subject only to the broadest standard of relevance, and require the active participation of the recipient.

Finally, the Court finds no support for the proposition that a Member of Congress must be given advance notice of a search, with an opportunity to screen out and remove materials the Member believes to be privileged. Indeed, the Court is aware of no case in which such a procedure is mandated by any other recognized privilege. To the contrary, in Zurcher, the Supreme Court expressly rejected such a requirement where the location to be searched contained material protected under the First Amendment. 436 U.S. at 567 (“[W]e decline to reinterpret the [Fourth] Amendment to impose a general constitutional barrier against warrants to search newspaper premises, to require resort to subpoenas as a general rule, or to demand prior notice and hearing in connection with the issuance of search warrants.”). The Supreme Court held that no special protections are required when a search warrant is sought for a newspaper office, finding that the standard preconditions for a warrant are sufficient to protect against unjustified intrusions on the press. Id. at 565. The Court stated:

Aware of the long struggle between Crown and press and desiring to curb unjustified official intrusions, the Framers took the enormously important step of subjecting searches to the test of reasonableness and to the general rule requiring search warrants issued by neutral magistrates. They nevertheless did not forbid warrants where the press was involved, did not require special showings that subpoenas would be impractical, and did not insist that the owner of the place to be searched, if connected with the press, must be shown to be implicated in the offense being investigated. . . . Properly administered, the preconditions for a warrant – probable cause, specificity with respect to the place to be searched and the things to be seized, and overall reasonableness – should afford sufficient protection against the harms that are assertedly threatened by warrants for searching newspaper offices.

Id. Similarly here, the Framers were well aware of the long struggle between Crown and the legislature, yet did not forbid warrants where the Legislative Branch is involved and did not impose any additions to the preconditions for such a warrant. As in Zurcher, the preconditions for a properly administered warrant that seeks only unprivileged material that falls outside the sphere of legitimate legislative activity are sufficient to protect against the harms assertedly being threatened here. No one argues that the warrant executed upon Congressman Jefferson’s office was not properly administered.

Therefore, there was no impermissible intrusion on the legislature.

The fact that some privileged material was incidentally captured by the search does not constitute an unlawful intrusion.<sup>7</sup> See In re Possible Violations of 18 U.S.C. §§

<sup>7</sup> The cases that address how to remedy the improper use of protected legislative material in a criminal prosecution support the proposition that the mere disclosure of Speech or Debate material to the Government does not offend the Constitution, as in those cases, privileged material had certainly been exposed to the Government. The remedy imposed in those cases was simply that the material was excluded from use against a Member of Congress. See Johnson, 383 U.S. at 185 (“With all references to [Speech or Debate material] eliminated [from the indictment], we think the Government should not be precluded from a new trial on this count, thus wholly purged of elements offensive to the Speech or Debate Clause.”); United States v. Rostenkowski, 59 F.3d 1291, 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (“[T]he Government does not have to establish an independent source for the information upon which it would prosecute a Member of Congress. Rather . . . the Member must show that the Government has relied upon privileged material.”); Id. at 1301 (where “the indictment is valid on its face, the Speech or Debate Clause does not require pre-trial review of the evidence to be presented at trial”); United States v. McDade, 28 F.3d 283, 300 (3d Cir. 1994) (even if two overt acts were alleged in violation of the Clause, there were “numerous other overt acts” to support the indictment); United States v. Myers, 635 F.2d 932, 941 (2d Cir. 1980) (dismissal not required although grand jury heard “some evidence of legislative acts that is privileged

201, 371, 491 F. Supp. 211, 214 n.2 (D.D.C. 1980) (“The Speech or Debate Clause does not protect confidentiality of material”). The Speech or Debate Clause is not undermined by the mere incidental review of privileged legislative material, given that Congressman Jefferson may never be questioned regarding his legitimate legislative activities, is immune from civil or criminal liability for those activities, and no privileged material may ever be used against him in court.

Amicus contends that even a review of the documents by the Court to determine privilege is unconstitutional. See Amicus Brief 29. Contrary to the arguments of amicus, legislators do not have the right to determine the scope of their own privilege under the Speech or Debate Clause. The Founders expressly rejected a constitutional proposal that would have permitted Members collectively to be the exclusive judges of their own privileges. 2 Records of the Federal Convention of 1787 503 (Max Ferrand ed., 1966). In opposition to the proposal, Madison explained that it would be preferable “to make provision for ascertaining by law” the extent of privileges “previously & duly established” rather than to “give a discretion to each House as to the extent of its own privileges.” Id. Indeed, it is the Judicial Branch that ascertains the requirements of the law in accordance with Article III of the Constitution. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 704-05 (1974) (citing The Federalist No. 47, at 313 (S. Mittell ed., 1938)).

The power to determine the scope of one’s own privilege is not available to any other person, including members of the co-equal branches of government: federal judges, see In re Certain Complaints Under Investigation, 783 F.2d 1488, 1518-20 (11th Cir.

by the Speech or Debate Clause”); compare United States v. Helstoski, 635 F.2d 200, 205-06 (3d Cir. 1980) (indictment must be dismissed where the “improper introduction of privileged matter permeated the whole proceeding”). None of these cases suggest that the exposure of protected legislative material to the Government violated the Speech or Debate Clause.

1986), or the President of the United States, see Nixon, 418 U.S. at 703-05. When President Nixon asserted that “the separation of powers doctrine precludes judicial review of a President’s claim of privilege,” the Supreme Court held that it is “the province and duty of this Court ‘to say what the law is’ with respect to the claim of privilege presented in this case.” Nixon, 418 U.S. at 703-05 (quoting Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 177 (1803)). In Nixon, the Court supported its conclusion regarding the executive privilege by relying upon a series of cases interpreting the explicit immunity conferred by the Speech or Debate Clause. 418 U.S. at 704 (citing Doe v. McMillan, 412 U.S. 306 (1973); Gravel, 408 U.S. 606; Brewster, 418 U.S. 501; Johnson, 383 U.S. 169). The Court stated that it has “consistently exercised the power to construe and delineate claims arising under express powers” such as the legislative privilege. Nixon, 418 U.S. at 704.

The formulation of the Speech or Debate privilege “implies that the judiciary cannot avoid determining what are the outer limits of legitimate legislative process.” Brown & Williamson, 62 F.3d at 415. The claim by amicus that the Constitution does not allow a document-by-document review by the judiciary fails. See In re Possible Violations of 18 U.S.C. §§ 201, 371, 491 F. Supp. 211 (D.D.C. 1980) (ordering in camera hearing to determine whether subpoenaed documents were covered by the legislative privilege at which Government was allowed to be present and to contest the claims of privilege); Benford v. Am. Broad. Cos., 98 F.R.D. 42, 45 & n.2 (D. Md. 1983) (requiring detailed index of potentially privileged documents under Speech or Debate Clause to be submitted for judicial review and suggesting the need for in camera review of certain relevant documents “to determine whether the congressional defendants have accurately characterized their content”); cf. Nixon, 418 U.S. at 706 (“Absent a claim of need to protect [national security], we find it difficult to accept the argument that even the very important interest in confidentiality of Presidential communications is significantly diminished by production of such material for in camera inspection with all the protection that a district court will be obliged to provide”). The district court in Benford refused to “blindly accept the[] conclusory and seemingly self-serving suggestion that [the House Select Committee on Aging] will screen what is and what is not protected.” 98 F.R.D. at 45. Review of allegedly privileged material by the Court is allowed and appropriate under the Constitution.

The D.C. Circuit has recognized that the Supreme Court “has been careful not to extend the scope of [the Speech or Debate Clause] further than its purposes require.” Rostenkowski, 59 F.3d at 1302 (quoting Forrester v. White, 484 U.S. 219, 224 (1988)). The Clause’s “shield does not extend beyond what is necessary to preserve the integrity of the legislative process.” Id. (quoting Brewster, 408 U.S. at 517). The view of the Speech or Debate privilege espoused by Congressman Jefferson and amicus extends that privilege far beyond that which its purposes require, and far beyond anything the law can support. The Court has found no law, and Congressman Jefferson and amicus point to none, which sustains the provision of such a sweeping protection to Members of Congress. To do so would eviscerate the effect and purpose of a search warrant wherever legislative materials are kept.

Here, Congressman Jefferson has not been made to answer, either in terms of questions or in terms of defending himself from prosecution, for speech or activities done in furtherance of the legislative process. Therefore, the search did not violate the Speech or Debate Clause.<sup>8</sup>

2. Separation of Powers

Congressman Jefferson also argues that the issuance and execution of the search warrant in this case violated the general principle of the separation of powers, stating that “[t]he delicate balance of our democratic system was disrupted when the court authorized the executive branch to search the Member’s office and peruse and remove Speech or Debate material.” Mem. 13. This argument too must fail. As the Supreme Court has recognized, “The check-and-balance mechanism, buttressed by unfettered debate in an open society with a free press, has not encouraged abuses of power or tolerated them long when they arose. This may be explained in part because the third branch has intervened with neutral authority.” Brewster, 408 U.S. at 523.

Indeed, this Court intervened here with the neutral authority of the third branch as a check on the power sought to be exerted by the Executive Branch when it authorized a

<sup>8</sup> The Government argues that even if the execution of the search warrant impermissibly intruded on legislative activity, the careful procedures established by the Government here are sufficient to protect Congressman Jefferson from suffering any prejudice. Cf. Weatherford v. Bursey, 429 U.S. 545, 556-58 (1977) (no constitutional violation where undercover agent overheard protected conversation between defendant and his attorney, but did not disclose that information to Prosecution Team, because there was not “at least a realistic possibility of injury to [defendant] or benefit to the State”). The Court finds that a harmless-error analysis is not appropriate in the context of the Speech or Debate privilege. See United States v. Swindall, 971 F.2d 1531, 1548 n.21 (11th Cir. 1992) (“a harmless-error analysis will not excuse a violation [of the Speech or Debate Clause]”); cf. Brown & Williamson, 62 F.3d at 419 (“The degree of disruption [of the legislative process] is immaterial. . . . any probing of legislative acts is sufficient to trigger the immunity.”) (emphasis in original). Here, there was no intrusion into legitimate legislative activity, as the search warrant sought only non-privileged material, and the Congressman was not compelled to provide any testimony as to his legitimate legislative activity. The Government’s incidental and cursory review of documents covered by the legislative privilege, in order to extract non-privileged evidence, does not constitute an intrusion on legitimate legislative activity.

particularized search warrant only upon a showing of probable cause. The statement by amicus that if the search here is upheld, in the future the Government need “only to persuade a federal judge” to obtain warrants to search other congressional offices, is a gross trivialization of the role of the judiciary. Amicus Brief 33.<sup>9</sup> A federal judge is not a mere rubber stamp in the warrant process, but rather an independent and neutral official sworn to uphold and defend the Constitution.

If there is any threat to the separation of powers here, it is not from the execution of a search warrant by one co-equal branch of government upon another, after the independent approval of the third separate, and co-equal branch. Rather, the principle of the separation of powers is threatened by the position that the Legislative Branch enjoys the unilateral and unreviewable power to invoke an absolute privilege, thus making it immune from the ordinary criminal process of a validly issued search warrant. This theory would allow Members of Congress to frustrate investigations into non-legislative criminal activities for which the Speech or Debate Clause clearly provides no protection from prosecution. “Our speech or debate privilege was designed to preserve legislative independence, not supremacy.” Brewster, 408 U.S. at 508. The execution of the search warrant upon Congressman Jefferson’s congressional office did not violate the separation of powers principle.

<sup>9</sup> Amicus goes even further when it claims that the execution of a search warrant on a congressional office threatens to “reduce Congress to a subordinate branch of government by opening the door to unchecked executive branch overreach and abuse.” Amicus Brief 32. This claim does not merely trivialize the role of the Court, but actually ignores it completely.

3. Fourth Amendment

Finally, Congressman Jefferson contends that the search of his office was unreasonable in violation of the Fourth Amendment because his counsel was barred from the office during the search, and because the Government relied on a false premise in the search warrant affidavit that it had exhausted all lesser intrusive means of obtaining the evidence sought. The Court finds that there is no right to have one's counsel present during the execution of a search warrant, that there is no exhaustion requirement to the issuance of a search warrant, and further that the affidavit contained no false premise. The search was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment.

Congressman Jefferson asserts that the barring of his counsel from his office during the search violated Rule 41 and rendered the search unreasonable in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41(f)(2) provides:

An officer present during the execution of the warrant must prepare and verify an inventory of any property seized. The officer must do so in the presence of another officer and the person from whom, or from whose premises, the property was taken. If either one is not present, the officer must prepare and verify the inventory in the presence of at least one other credible person.

See also United States v. Daniel, 667 F.2d 783, 785 (9th Cir. 1982) ("Neither Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(d) nor the Fourth Amendment requires that the owner of the premises searched be present at the time of the inventory."). The rule says nothing about a property owner's counsel or designated representative. The Government is not required to permit a property owner or his counsel to supervise the execution of a search warrant. The plain language of the Rule clearly contemplates that the owner need not be present, as it explicitly provides that when an owner is not present, any “credible person” may witness the inventory of the search. Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(f)(2).<sup>10</sup>

The Court is not aware of any authority, and Congressman Jefferson points to none, that holds that the right to counsel extends to the execution of a search warrant. As the Supreme Court has noted, the Constitution protects property owners not by giving them license to engage law enforcement officers in debate over the scope or basis for the warrant, but by requiring that warrants be issued by neutral magistrates and by permitting parties to seek suppression after the fact. United States v. Grubbs, 126 S. Ct. 1494, 1501 (2006). A right to be present at searches is not available to any other person under the Fourth Amendment. See United States v. Stefonek, 179 F.3d 1030, 1034 (7th Cir. 1999). The Court will not create such a right for Congressman Jefferson here.

Congressman Jefferson and amicus also argue that the search was unreasonable because the Government did not exhaust all less intrusive approaches to obtaining the evidence. Both recognize that such a standard is nowhere to be found in Rule 41 law (indeed they cite no law supporting this argument). Amicus states instead that the Government “established [such a standard] for itself,” and urges the Court to “hold the Justice Department to that standard.” Amicus Brief 41; see Reply 16-17. Neither the Fourth Amendment nor Rule 41 requires the Government to establish that a search is the least intrusive means of obtaining evidence. See Zurcher, 436 U.S. at 564-68. The Government made such a showing in the search warrant application here not because the law requires it, but to demonstrate that it did not lightly or precipitously seek a search warrant in this investigation.

<sup>10</sup> Congressman Jefferson suggests that the search warrant return was defective because it “does not identify anyone in whose presence it was prepared or verified.” Mem. 8. Rule 41 does not require the witness to sign or otherwise affirm the inventory or warrant return.

To the extent that Congressman Jefferson argues that the search warrant was unreasonable because it contained false statements regarding the Government's exhaustion of lesser intrusive means of obtaining the documents, the Court finds that the affidavit to the search warrant accurately stated that the Government had exhausted all reasonable and timely alternative means of obtaining the evidence sought.

While the search here entailed an invasion somewhat greater than usual because it took place in a congressional office certain to contain privileged legislative material, the Government has demonstrated a compelling need to conduct the search in relation to a criminal investigation involving very serious crimes, and has been unable to obtain the evidence sought through any other reasonable means.<sup>11</sup> Therefore, the search conducted of Congressman Jefferson's congressional office was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment. See Camara, 387 U.S. at 536-37 (“[T]here can be no ready test for <sup>11</sup> Searches of other areas in which privileged material is expected to be found have not been held to be unreasonable in violation of the Fourth Amendment. See, e.g., United States v. Triumph Capital Group, Inc., 211 F.R.D. 31, 43 (D. Conn. 2002) (search of computer believed to contain privileged attorney-client communications using filter team, with ultimate review by magistrate judge before any document was turned over to prosecution team, was “proper, fair and acceptable method of protecting privileged communications”). While some district courts have expressed reservations about the use of filter teams in seizing material protected by the attorney-client privilege, those courts have instead favored the use of special masters, magistrate judges, or the district court itself to conduct the review. See, e.g., United States v. Neill, 952 F. Supp. 834, 839-42 (D.D.C. 1997). The Court is aware of no case, however, which has found that the presence of privileged material in the location to be searched rendered such a search unreasonable in contravention of the Fourth Amendment.

determining reasonableness other than by balancing the need to search against the invasion which the search entails”).<sup>12</sup>

III. CONCLUSION

The facts and questions of law presented here are indeed unprecedented. It is well-established, however, that a Member of Congress is generally bound to the operation of the criminal laws as are ordinary persons. The Speech or Debate Clause does not “make Members of Congress super-citizens, immune from criminal responsibility.” Brewster, 408 U.S. at 516. Members of Congress are not “exempt[] . . . from liability or process in criminal cases.” Gravel, 408 U.S. at 626.

The existing broad protections of the Speech or Debate Clause – absolute immunity from prosecution or suit for legislative acts and freedom from being “questioned” about those acts (including privilege from the testimonial act of producing documents in response to a subpoena) – satisfy the fundamental purpose of the Clause to protect the independence of the legislature. The Court declines to extend those protections further, holding that the Speech or Debate Clause does not shield Members of Congress from the execution of valid search warrants. Congressman Jefferson’s interpretation of the Speech or Debate privilege would have the effect of converting every congressional office into a taxpayer-subsidized sanctuary for crime. Such a result is not supported by the Constitution or judicial precedent and will not be adopted here. See Williamson v. United States, 28 S. Ct. at 167 (“[T]he laws of this country allow no place or employment as a sanctuary for crime.”) (quotation omitted).

<sup>12</sup> The Memorandum issued by President Bush on May 25, 2006, which directed the sealing of the seized materials, expired on Sunday, July 9, 2006. Accordingly, as of Monday, July 10, 2006, the Department of Justice shall be free to regain custody of the seized materials, and to resume its review thereof.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court has found that the search executed on Congressman Jefferson's congressional office was constitutional, as it did not trigger the Speech or Debate Clause privilege, did not offend the principle of the separation of powers, and was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment. Accordingly, the Court will deny the motion for return of property. An appropriate order will accompany this Memorandum Opinion.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Pending before the Court is Congressman William J. Jefferson's Motion for Stay Pending Appeal. On May 20, 2006, federal agents executed a search warrant upon the movant's congressional office. The search warrant had been issued by this Court upon the Government's showing of probable cause to believe that evidence of a crime would be found in the office. On May 24, 2006, Congressman Jefferson filed a motion for return of the property seized during the search. On May 25, 2006, the President of the United States issued a Memorandum sequestering the seized material for a period of forty-five days. On July 10, 2006, this Court issued a Memorandum Opinion and Order denying the Motion for Return of Property. The Order stated that as the forty-five day sequestering period had expired, the Department of Justice is now free to regain custody of the seized materials and resume its review thereof. The instant motion seeks a stay of the execution of that Order, pending the Congressman's appeal of the Court's denial of his Motion for Return of Property.<sup>1</sup>

In determining whether to grant a motion to stay pending appeal, a court must consider whether the movant has shown: (1) that he has a substantial likelihood of success on the merits; (2) that he will suffer irreparable injury if the stay is denied; (3) that issuance of the stay will not cause substantial harm to other parties; and (4) that issuing a stay will not harm the public interest. See Hilton v. Braunskill, 481 U.S. 770, 776 (1987); Virginia Petroleum Jobbers Ass'n v. FPC, 259 F.2d 921, 925 (D.C. Cir. 1958). Whether to grant or deny a stay depends on a "balance of the equities." Washington Metro. Area Transit Comm'n v. Holiday Tours, Inc., 559 F.2d 841, 843 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

First, while the issues in the motion for return of property are indeed serious as they raise constitutional questions dealing with the Separation of Powers doctrine and inter-branch comity, the Court found little support in the law for the positions argued in the motion. Congressman Jefferson has not made a strong showing that he is likely to prevail on the merits of his appeal. Second, Congressman Jefferson has not demonstrated that he would be irreparably harmed absent a stay. The seized materials will be reviewed by a filter team, and Congressman Jefferson will have a full opportunity to raise claims of privilege and have them resolved by the Court before any member of the prosecution team is given access to the materials.<sup>2</sup> Third, a stay would harm the other party to this litigation, in that the Government's ongoing investigation would be prejudiced by the delay. Similarly, issuing a stay would harm the public's interest in a prompt and final outcome of the Government's investigation of serious crimes involving a sitting United <sup>2</sup> The Court at oral argument inquired if the legislative privilege concerns would be allayed by the appointment of someone other than the Government attorneys to do the review, in the nature of a special master like a former Congressman. The movant took the position that this procedure was no more legitimate than the procedure put in place.

States Congressman running for reelection in November.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that the balance of the equities clearly weighs against the issuance of a stay in this case. Accordingly, the Motion for Stay Pending Appeal is denied. An appropriate Order will accompany this Memorandum Opinion.
